A while back, WebPT co-founder and chief clinical officer Heidi Jannenga, PT, DPT, ATC, published an article [illegible] discrepancies between continuing education unit (CEU) requirements from state to state—as well as the importance of standardizing physical therapist CEU requirements (and developing better CEU delivery platforms (/products/ceu)) to move the entire industry forward. Well, we decided to dig deeper into the differences in physical therapy CEU requirements by state. And it turns out that some states require a whopping 40 hours of PT contact hours every two years while others don't require any at all. To see where your state falls in this mix, click the appropriate link in the alphabetized link bank below:

While this list should get you started, it's still a good idea to check in with your state's licensing board (https://www.apta.org/Licensure/StatePracticeActs/) to ensure you know the most up-to-date and comprehensive rules for license renewal in your region. Many states also have specific requirements regarding the number of credit hours providers can obtain in certain course categories (e.g., online). For the easiest way to complete your CEUs—on-time, every time—check out WebPT CEU (https://www.webpt.com/products/ceu/). With WebPT CEU, providers can access a plethora of industry-specific and state-approved courses, which makes it easy to stay current with not only continuing competency requirements, but also evolving industry demands. WebPT CEU also providers users with:

Automatic grading and certificate generation
Progress tracking
Up-to-date license requirements by state and specialty
Forever access to completed coursework
Assessment PRO Specialty Tests access
